

INVESTMENT STRATEGY

The leverage factor of the fund should be no more than 300 percent of the total fund and most of the time shall be between 100-250 percent.

INVESTOR PROFILE

MANAGER'S COMMENT

The fund is down on February. The losses are caused by CME NASDAQ100 futures and NYMEX WTI Crude Oil futures. The profits are attributed to COMEX Gold futures and to a smaller extent, NYMEX Copper futures. In view of January performance, the fund is taking lower-than-normal risk in February. Smaller sizing protects the fund from the current unfavourable trading environment. Recent asset prices are driven by news and sentiment rather than fundamentals, such market regime is difficult for swing trading.

US equities had a positive month in February. The tech-heavy NASDAQ100 Index has rallied for ten consecutive weeks this year, the longest weekly positive upswing since 2012. This "quiet bull" trend is quite impressive given the deteriorating fundamentals. Federal Reserve had essentially anchored monetary policy with equity prices, forming a strong support to stock market. We expressed our bearish view on NASDAQ100 Index and had a few losing trades towards end of month. Overall, we made losses by swing trading NASDAQ100 futures this month.

Crude Oil ended the month positive in February. WTI Crude Oil futures April contract spent most time trading within $52 to $58 level. News of further production cuts along with lower US inventories are among the bullish factors for oil price. However, WTI prices failed to break $58 level, resulted in a tight range. We again had some losses WTI Crude Oil futures this month.

Gold indeed closed positive on February, respecting the historical seasonality. However, gold price was quite choppy throughout the month. COMEX Gold futures April contract successfully closed above $1340 level for merely two days. Afterwards, gold price abruptly dropped to around $1325 level and failed to rally. We managed to make profits by taking long positions on COMEX gold futures during mid-February.

Looking forward to March, we continue to trade smaller in size. Once we see higher price volatility or markets more reactive to fundamentals, we may gradually revert to normal sizing. We expect an interim trade deal being made between US and China, with minimal progress on divisive issues like Intellectual Property rights. We also expect the jawboning by President Trump to be a less influential factor on asset prices over time.
