

INVESTMENT STRATEGY

The leverage factor of the fund should be no more than 300 percent of the total fund and most of the time shall be between 100-250 percent.

INVESTOR PROFILE

MANAGER'S COMMENT

The fund reached another new high on October 2018. The profits are mainly contributed by NASDAQ100 Index futures and COMEX Gold futures. The losses are attributed to ICE Sugar futures and WTI Crude Oil futures. October was the most volatile month for financial markets this year, respecting the seasonality of last year. We saw the price volatility increasing across equity, bonds, currencies and commodities.

This month our firm bearish view on US equities came into fruition. Prior to the October 10th crash we held a decent short position on NASDAQ100 index futures. We fully exited the position on October 13th. We believe that staying disciplined is even more important under a volatile market like this October. Fundamentally we think the US stock is overvalued, especially tech stocks; and a price correction is overdue. Despite our strong conviction, we held a standard size on the short position, and been staying well under the risk limits.

As markets swung from risk-tolerant to risk-adverse, gold prices jumped and entered a higher price range on October. However, the COMEX Gold futures prices faced headwinds from the stronger US Dollar, and to a smaller extent, weaker Chinese Yuan. We managed to make profit by swing trading COMEX Gold futures this month.

On WTI Crude Oil, we did not participate much on the downtrend throughout October. We had a short-term bullish view towards end October due to implementation of Iran sanctions. However, US offered waiver to a few countries at the last minute of implementation date, causing an extension of downtrend on crude oil prices. We had a small loss on trading NYMEX WTI Crude Oil futures this month.

Looking forward, November is a month full of political events. We have official start of Iran Sanctions, US Midterm Elections, and the G20 Summit where President Trump and President Xi are reportedly to meet other. We expect steady news flow on US-China trade war until G20 officially starts on November 30th. As the US earnings season is wrapping up, there are a good number of companies reporting earnings beat, but there are also decent number of companies issuing weaker forward guidance. Lastly, we believe markets will stay volatile towards end of the year, which continued to be constructive to our trading.
